

Salm Global Land is an independent asset manager headquartered in Wallhausen, with additional locations in Atlanta (USA) and Waverley (New Zealand). For generations, the Salm-Salm family has owned land and benefited from its yields and returns. On this foundation, we acquire and manage land for our clients. In doing so, we place particular emphasis on the protection of ownership and on responsibility toward people and nature.

In the field of agriculture and forestry asset management, we are looking for a working student to join us at the earliest possible date.

We offer varied and diverse tasks:

In addition to research activities and the preparation of meetings, you will be responsible for creating and translating presentations. Furthermore, you will support us with ongoing projects and take on general administrative tasks.

This is what you can look forward to:

With us, you can think outside the box. You will become part of a professional, dynamic team and gain insights into international projects in the field of agriculture and forestry. We give you the opportunity to work independently and autonomously on projects that you accompany from start to finish.

Your profile:

- Excellent analytical skills, enjoyment of understanding complex relationships and identifying key aspects
- Confident demeanor and strong communication skills; team player with initiative and commitment; high motivation and enthusiasm for creating something new and further developing ventures
- Very good command of German and English; proficiency in MS Excel, PowerPoint, and Word
- You must be enrolled at a university

If this appeals to you, we look forward to receiving your application!
